

FISSEA Security Awareness, Training, & Education Contest &

Entry Form

Please review the rules before completing this entry form (pay attention to the due date). No late entries will be accepted. Be sure to fill this form out completely and email it with your entry to fissea-contest@nist.gov. Please submit an entry form with each entry.

Name of submitter: Native Intelligence, Inc. and Friends &

Name(s) to be printed on award certificate if your entry is selected as the winner:

K Rudolph, G. Mark Hardy, Niomi Rosenberg, Andrew Ellis, John Ippolito, Sam Carter &

Organization: Native Intelligence, Inc. &

How the organization should be listed under the name(s) on the award certificate if your entry is selected as the winner: !

Native Intelligence, Inc. and Friends

Address: PO Box 144 Glenelg, MD 21737

Phone: 410 531-1396

Email Address: kaie@nativeintelligence.com

Type of Entry: Poster

Title of Entry: Unexpected Attachments

Description of Entry:

This colorful poster shows a Golden Retriever at the beach where he has just received an unexpected message. It's tempting – the subject line offers free bones, but he's aware that it could be a phisher's trick. Messages that are too good to be true can cause problems for his organization, so he decides not to open the attachment.

The 11 x 17-inch poster is designed to appeal to animal lovers, beach lovers, sunset lovers, and those who are tempted by mysterious messages in bottles or emails that present hard-to-resist offers. It reminds us to be careful with attachments, especially those that we are not expecting.

A white dog is sitting on a beach at sunset, looking towards a glass bottle. The bottle is tilted and has a bone-shaped tag hanging from it with the text "Free bones!". The background shows a sunset over the ocean with waves.

Unexpected message?

© 2017 Native Intelligence, Inc.

Be careful with attachments.